An Event Carefully Planned by The STORE for MEN to Help You Save -

Our Annual Important Selling of

Suits of Superior Imported Woolens

A New Assortment, Tailored in Our Own Factory to the Unequaled Specifications of Marshall Field & Company, and Offering Men and Young Men the Outstanding Value of the Hour

I has taken us months to get ready for this important annual event. Suits L as fine as these can't be turned out on short notice. The woolens, for example, had to be selected months ago in the mills where they were being produced. That involved a trip overseas by a representative sent direct from this Store, and a journey through the woolen centers of England, Scotland, Ireland, Germany, and Belgium to pick them out.

Then they had to be London-shrunk, shipped over here, and shepherded through the customs to our own factory. Here the actual cutting and tailoring had to be done, by our own needlemen, in our own workrooms, to the exacting standard of Marshall Field & Company, the highest in the industry.

The result is worth all the effort. By marshalling our resources in this fashion, we're able to offer our customers in this event the finest Suit that fifty dollars can buy anywhere. That means winning a host of new friends and confirming the loyalty of the old. Why not join them and wear the sort of clothes you really prefer, at a substantial saving?

SENATOR JOHNSON'S ADDRESS.

Senstor Hiram Johnson's speech at Cieveland develops his ideas more definitely than his announcement of candidacy and lays the foundation of his appeal to the party for nomination. It is an able statement. It is not a very thrilling utterance. Indeed it could not well be. We are not at Armageddon. Senator Johnson is too sane and too candid a man to pretend the nation is in danger. He offers himself in good faith, and since danger. He offers himself in good faith, and since Mr. Coolidge and he are the only formidable conto this time. The contest between them is there-fore rather to Senatof Johnson's disadvantage, considering the strength inherent in Mr. Coolidge's patronage as President.
On the other hand, the party will be grateful to Senator Johnson for his loyal and self-respecting refusal to raise false issues and for the tone of his speech, which is without rancor or person-ality or demagogic exaggeration. It trankly asserts differences with Mr. Coolidge, and states them without dust throwing or mud slinging. The air is clearer for it and the country will be grateful portant views, with which we think the majority of the public, not only in his own party but out of it, are more in accord than with those of Mr. Coolidge. The first of these is as to the bonus. Senator Johnson's position on this question, in our sponally as well as politically, opinion, is stronger, both in reason and morality. e porteen states and many congressmen irri- he recalls that the bonus was promised by the taxation. As to the facts he states, there is no fourteenth and fifteenth amendments. The army was sent into the south once to enforce those amendments and the Negroes voted. They controlled legislatures and ran state governments, and did it scandalously, but they were voting. When the army was withdrawn and the Klux had the situation in hand they ceused to vote.

Nullification does not need statutes. The Negroes in the Second ward of Chicago vote. The Negroes in Georgia do not, except as they are informed it is safe to do so. We do not want Negro control it is safe to do so. We do not want Negro control to the farmer but burt him.

"stand between the farmer and his market" is doubtful as to the fact and wrong in principle. It is a class appeal and it is not really in the farmers' interest. Perhaps rates should come down, and Mr. Coolidge has proposed a fair examination of the question. That implies a wise and just recognition of the fact that unnecessary and unfair reduction, which would affect unfavorably the efficiency of the carriers and prevent them from extending and improving their service, would not help the farmer but burt him.

ADVICE FOR DAIRYMEN.

ADVICE FOR DAIRYMEN.

His article is written for dairymen who live where there is satural ice to put up. Any one else who reads it is just naturally contrary. They would peep through any crack in anybody's high fence.

The United States department of agriculture is trying to persuade the dairyment to put up ice. Many milk producers depend on well water to cool the milk. The freshly drawn milk at a temperature of near 28 is poured into eight or ten gallon cans and these are set in a vat of well or spring water. The water from most farm wells in the summer registers in the vicinity of 58. Rarely can a dairyman reduce the temperature of milk to as low as 55 by the use of uniced spring or well water. Milk spoils fairly rapidly when it is above that temperature. The farmer knows how rapidly it goes to pieces if the temperature is much higher than that, and, in consequence, he always chills it enough to "take out the animal heat." What he does not know is how much it spoils when kept at 55 or a little above for the two days or more between the time when the city baby drinks it.

In the matter of eafsty of milk, so far its matter of eafsty of milk, so far the matter of eafsty of milk of the milk leaves his hands and the time when the city baby drinks it.

Now is the time to put the feebours in order and to clean out the pond. There may be time before the ground freezes deep to throw up a dam and make a pond. It is not so necessary to make the pond spotless. Bacteria do not with stand freezing well. If there are a lot of typhold bacilli in the water to be frozen, 55 per cent of them will be killed by the freezing, and the other's per cent will die out if the ice is held four months or longer. Besides, most of this lee is to be used in water around the can, and sons of it is to get into the milk itself.

The United States department of agriculture supplies farmers builetins telling in detail how to build techouses, make fee ponds, and to harvest and keep los.

It was read and alored in armies. Most pacifistic of documents, it was read and the word is not o'er vehement—in a country convulsed by civil war, read and adored in armies that were at each other's throats. There myself encountered this book in a prison; encountered there also, in smay conversation, the pathetic Don Quixots of our time and country—only a does not know that he is pathetic—who said, "Among all books, it has man more and done most for me." Such speaking, to be of value, requires alleaden out of the speaker's experience. Eugene Debs' validation was certain lines he had written in prison. With the smile which is the tenderest I

Beyond these bars I see the stars;

I see the stars;
God's glittering heralds becken me.
My soul is winged: Behold! I'm free.

By one of the most delicate coincidences in my experience, the volume on a life of which Quixote later wrote out those lines for me was a copy of harles Kingsley's "Alton Locke."

What, then, is the essence of this book that, singing, winged its way bround the world, that touched with equal solace the souls of opposing armies, that became sometimes the gospeler of wild revolt and sometimes the sober art book of left-wing parties, that set state prisoners to writing hymns, and hat—for the sure token of masterpleces is the universality of their appeal—is mong the haif dozen favorite romances of boyhood?

I find the book's credo in these lines from it:

The long as ignorance and misery remain upon the earth, so long will books of this kind be demanded. . . Destroy the cave, ignorance, and you destroy the mele, Crime. . . The sole social evil is darkness; humanity is one, for all men are of the same clay, and in this nether world, at least, there is no difference in predestination; we are the same chadow before, the same field during, and the same ashes afterward. But ignorance, mixed with human pasts, blackens it, and this incurable blackens enters man and there becomes Evil.

His views—Valjean's—are imparted in the seventh chapter of the second book of Mistrables "—a chapter entitled "A Desperate Man's Heart." In readat chapter it is important to remember that Jean Valjean's five years at alleys have now become nineteen. The period has been ample for him to certain conclusions:

certain conclusions:

See declared that there was no equilibrium between the harm he had done the harm done him; and he came to the conclusion that his punishment the conviction that life was war and that in this war he was the vanished. As he had no weapon but his hatred, he resolved to sharpen it in a galleys and to take it with him when he left.

There come, four pages further on, two sentences of Victor Hugo at his two short sentences that he makes to strike upon the mind like blows. all is preoccupied with that Jean Valjean with whom society had closed its sunt nineteen years before. Victor Hugo is disturbed by his gaze:

Hutchinson Tells How "Characters' Write Own Stories

BY SIDNEY DARK. A. S. M. Hutchinson has written a professe for a new popular edition of "This Freedom" in which, with characteristic naiveté, he defends himself against his critics. He says that in "This Freedom" he never suggests that married women ought not to work. But apparently they ought not to work if their husbands are ready to keep them. Selfishness was Rosalte's characteristic and "self-killed that hume," Mr. Hutchinson has no sympathy with the feminism that demands that women as well as men shall be home." Mr. Hutchinson has no sympathy with the feminism that demands that women as well as men shall be free to live their own lives and develop their own exculties, and it is interesting and suggestive that so entirely a Victorian writer should be a best seller both in England and America.

Writing of "If Winter Comes." Mr. Hutchinson refers to the critics who have suggested that if Mark Sabre had not been a fool he would have found suitable lodgings for the unlucky girl whom he befriended, rather than taking her into his own house and upsetting his own domestic apple cart. The reason why Mark did not adopt this obvious procedure was that he never thought of it. Mr. Hutchinson's characters just tell him what to write, and he writes it, and if they choose to play the fool, that is their fault and not his. I commend this preface to American readers. It is not unamusing.

Vere Hutchinson, A. S. M. Hutchinson's elster, whose first novel, "Sea Wrack," was so considerable a success, has just finished her second novel, which she calls "Great Waters," of which the principal character is a pirrate.

NOTE: The Advertising Record Co. is an independent auditing bureau authorized and maintained by all the Chicago newspapers—its figures are accepted as official by publishers and advertisers, both local and national. This is the first time that these figures have been published this year exactly as prepared and issued by the Advertising Record Company.

From the above statement it is evident

That The Chicago Tribune published in 1923, 26,502.65 columns more than The Daily News, which is the second Chicago paper.

This enormous lead of The Tribune (26,502.65 columns), is 40% of the total printed by The Daily News.

But mere lineage does not tell the whole story. The advertiser considers what he pays for his advertising and that in turn is dependent upon circulation. The minimum rate of The Daily News for national advertising is 65 cents, while that of The Tribune is 80 cents on week days and $1.15 on Sundays. Notwithstanding this difference The Tribune gained 988 columns in national advertising during 1923 while the News lost 490 columns.

Not only did advertisers use 40% more lineage in The Tribune than in The Daily News, but they paid far more for it, and they paid more because they received more for their money.

Since April, 1917, the circulation of The Daily News has dropped from 479,000 to 383,000, while that of The Chicago Tribune has increased on week days from 417,000 to 579,000 and on Sundays from 684,000 to 923,000.

In 1916 The Tribune printed 12,861 columns more than The Daily News. In 1923 (notwithstanding rate increases necessitated by expanding circulation) The Tribune printed 26,502 columns more than The News.

Because The Chicago Tribune carries more advertising than any other newspaper in Chicago it is reasonably conclusive that it produces for its advertisers greater results than any other newspaper published in Chicago. This conclusion is substantiated by the constantly increasing volume of advertising which manufacturers, local merchants, advertising agencies and the general public place year after year in Double Breasted Effects.

NEW TORK — Special Correspondence.]—The sarterial plight of the extremely tall and extremely lanky man is said to contemplate. To dress becomingly is his hardest problem. We have many times suggested here that the man of long and narrow proportions is one of them who can most suggested the contemplate one of them who can most suggested the contemplate one of them who can most suggested the contemplate one of them who can most suggested the contemplate of the tions is one of those who can most suc-centully wear a double breasted jacket. But even the cut of the double breasted suit must be chosen with disglance we knew that for some reason it was not accomplishing as much broadening of the figure as it should. We looked carefully to see why.

The result of the scrutiny left us with the impression that the two rows of buttons used for the double breasted effect were too close together. That is, the horizontal line was too narrow, and as it is the horizontal line given by the double row of buttons in this type of coat which provides a broader appearing surface, it is more to the point to have the space in between the lines of buttons as great as is possible, while still maintaining a graceful cut.
